I enjoyed Tyler's course a lot! He has been a great addition to CGU and I hope he continues to teach at CGU, because the school is certainly lucky to have him. The reading workload was a bit heavy at the beginning of the course, but he was flexible, understanding, and accommodating. It was nice of him to slim down the readings as he adapted to how the course was going. The weekly assignments were also not too difficult to keep up with, which was nice and helped with (at least myself) not feeling too overwhelmed or burned out. He always actively tried to encourage discussion, even if students were having a hard time speaking up or responding. I appreciated that he was patient with the class in those times of unresponsiveness to discussion questions. It sometimes was actually a little funny because I think we would all notice the awkward silence and try to break it by giving our best responses, but I believe Tyler handled this well. This may just be me (for learning accessibility), but I personally do better when I can also read discussion questions on the screen or have some sort of notes/outline of what is being/has been discussed to follow along with (especially in a virtual setting). Maybe presentation slides or a word document with what has been discussed to assist with discussion could be helpful in the future? It was also really nice of Tyler to provide his own notes to our readings at the end of class sessions so that we could have more literature review and insights to go over. Additionally, I enjoyed his presentation slides that outlined expectations of our assignments (weekly papers, final paper, presentation) because often times professors assume students already know these things but he was actually the first professor to really showcase expectations and requirements in the entirety of my time at CGU. Also, I thought it was great that he acknowledged that students are all in different places of their education in his course, whether it be pursuing a Masters or PhD, working on a Thesis or Dissertation, or just taking courses for degree requirements. This was really refreshing because I have often experienced other courses where the professor only really caters to PhD students and assisting with Dissertations, which can be a little frustrating because it ends up not meeting the needs of all students. So, Tyler was really great about acknowledging this and being able to meet all the students where they are at. Lastly, I genuinely appreciated his motivating announcements to help students get to the end of the course, because it really showed that he cared about his students. Times have been tough and everyone has different ways of handling what's going on, so it's really cool to have a professor like Tyler that genuinely cares and is doing their best.

If Tyler can tell some historical stories, landmark events, students can connect the dots and better understand today's political standings.

Best lecture I have ever taken in cgu so far. I want to thank Doctor and the department for this opportunity.

Dr. Reny was a great hire by this institution. He brings to the department the knowledge and genuine care about student success that has been greatly lacking for the last four years. He is a great asset to this institution.
